Conference presentation

The aim of international conference “Evaluation in the Media” is to question the role of the media in the process of evaluation; they form an integral part of what may be termed the “culture”, the “fever”, the “mania” and the “explosion” of evaluation procedures observed in developed countries since the 1970s. While recognising that evaluation procedures – and the role of the media therein – were not novel, this conference aims to explore how the evaluation process has become ever more linked to the media (press, radio, television, web) in contemporary society.

The conference will stress mechanisms of evaluation based on quantification or “evaluative measures” such as: “rankings”, “winners”, “tops”, “lists”, “league tables”, “ratings”, “barometers”, “dashboards”, “benchmarks”. The conference will also pay attention to qualitative evaluation mechanisms that likewise flourish in the media: “prizes”, “labels”, “contests”, “rewards”, “trophies”, etc. By focusing on such traits, the conference hope to throw light on the rise of impersonal evaluation mechanisms, that exist alongside the traditional journalistic genres based on the expression of personal opinion (editorial, op-ed piece, criticism...); the media appear to simultaneously fulfill the roles of producers and co-producers, of relays and critics.

Four specific questions will be addressed. The first one is concerned with the origins, production processes and conditions – social, economic, journalistic, material, technical and legal – that underpin how the media become producers or co-producers of the evaluation process. Editorial and visual forms, ceremonies and events, and the communication processes in general that characterise evaluation mechanisms will be another theme of the conference. We consider here that these evaluation procedures are held not only to favour the production of “knowledge” but also to promote its dissemination and recognition. Media evaluation mechanisms also circulate more or less in various social spaces (media, political, economic, professional, civic, cultural, consumerist...). By analyzing the circulation of such evaluation mechanisms, the conference will attempt to shed light on both success and failures in the communicative process. Finally, the conference will address the effects of media evaluation.

The proliferation of evaluation procedures leads to an increase in the instances, mechanisms and numbers of actors involved in the overall process. In this regard, the conference is open to any field as long as the approach is in line with the general scientific guidelines outlined previously. The following list is indicative, not exclusive: the areas covered will include higher education and research, regions, culture, education, health, web, brands, capital, finance, communication, tourism, wine, sports, media, business, etc.

Proposals may come from the humanities and the social sciences: media studies and communication, semiology, sociology, history, political sciences, linguistics, economics, etc.
